Since its establishment in 1947, the Bureau of Indian Standards (BIS) has developed over 22,000 Indian Standards through its 17 Division Councils (DCs) and approximately 400 Sectional Committees (SCs) under them. Each committee includes experts from various sectors, including the Central and State Governments, regulatory bodies, research institutions, academia, industry, consumer groups, and civil society organizations. It has been the constant endeavour of BIS to reach out to the individuals and organizations with the requisite expert se

It is in this context that the BIS has decided to extend the ambit of its scheme to involve 2. the young professionals in the standard formulation process to the officers of the state and experiences.

This new initiative of BIS is aimed at creating a pool of domain area experts for the formulation of national standards in future by associating the officers up to the age of 35 years as Young Professionals with the Technical Committees of BIS related to their respective disciplines. As Young Professionals, they get the opportunity to attend the meetings of the Technical Committees as observers, receive the documents related to the standards under development, comment on the documents and join the capacity-building programmes organised by BIS. They may also be invited to participate in important national level events

This initiative is also beneficial to the State governments, as they have a pool of empowered professionals to help them in the implementation of standards in the Government programmes.

I request you to give a wide publicity to this BIS initiative among the officers of the department and the attached organisations, and encourage the young officers to apply to be engaged as Young Professionals. They can do so by using the 'Join as Young Professional' feature on the Standardisation Portal of the eBIS(www.manakonline in)

BIS will get in touch with the applicants to assign them the Technical Committees and detailed programme of action.
